10 Icons Tour 2026

8 days 7 nights

July - August

This summer, conquer 10 of the most iconic climbs of the Tour De France.

Our 10 icons tour gives you an incredible opportunity to take on the famous French Alpine cols over one fantastic week. Most of us will never serve an ace in Wimbledon, take a penalty kick at Wembley or score a try at the Aviva. But you can cycle in the shadow of the Tour de France legends.

Our tour is fully supported with two team cars, bicycle mechanic, snacks and refreshments on the road and your very own road captain. All luggage transfers and check in are taken care of in advance.

All you have to do is turn up and ride.

Col de Joux Plane

Elevation 1700m

Day One - Morning Col de Joux Plane

Col de Joux Plane - The classic ascent is from the south, starting in Samoens. In 1997, Le Tour winner, Marco Pantani managed the climb in 33 mins. Armstrong called it his 'bête noire'! In 2023, it provided one of the most exciting stage finishes of Le Tour, eventually finishing in our home town of Morzine.

Steep and unrelenting, the climb is considered one of the hardest in the Alps. Although the first couple of kilometres are tough, it soon backs off to more manageable levels. The views of Mont Blanc from the summit are stunning and make the climb so worthwhile.

Day One - Afternoon Col de la Colombière

Col de la Colombière - The pass was first included in Le Tour in 1960 and has since featured 23 times, most recently in 2021. It starts relatively gently but once past Le Reposoir, things get a little more serious. The summit is visible with around 3km to go but seems never ending to actually reach.

Col de la Madeleine

Elevation 1,993m

Day Two - Morning Col de la Madeleine

Col de la Madeleine - Another Tour de France favourite, it has featured 25 times since 1969. The climb from the north is on a quiet, narrow road initially passing through wooded terrain before rising above the tree line into open country.

It's a long climb at 25km but a steady one. The gradient varies with two plateaus at broadly a third and two thirds distance. The summit offers stunning views as we pause for a brief lunch before embarking on a 20km descent to La Chambre.

Col du Glandon Elevation 1,924m

Day Two - Afternoon Col du Glandon

Col du Glandon - Similar in character to the Madeleine, the Glandon is a long steady climb but with a sting in the tail so try to keep something in reserve. The last 3km feature multiple steep hairpins as the road winds up to the summit.

This will be a long day with the most climbing of the Tour. We finish by descending from whence we came then along the valley floor to our overnight stop.

Day Three - Morning

Col du Télégraphe

The Télégraphe - Riding from the hotel, we warm up for 14km along the valley floor to the start of the Col du Télégraphe in St Michel de Maurienne. It's a steady climb with an average of 7.3% rising 850m over 11.8km. As ever there are great views from the top back down into the Maurienne valley. We then drop down into the ski resort of Valloire for a mid-morning coffee stop.

Col du Galibier

Elevation 2,642m

Day Three - Afternoon Col du Galibier

The Galibier - Probably the most iconic of all Tour De France climbs, the Col du Galibier has seen countless battles over its 18km.

The founder of Le Tour, Henri Desgrange, was branded a bandit when he introduced the Galibier to the race in 1911 and it was seen as an act of pure sadism. In 2022, the riders of Le Tour climbed it twice on consecutive days! The terrain is sometimes bleak, sometimes ethereal but always challenging. No matter what's been said about these two climbs in the past, this is the day you will feel like a true Tour rider.

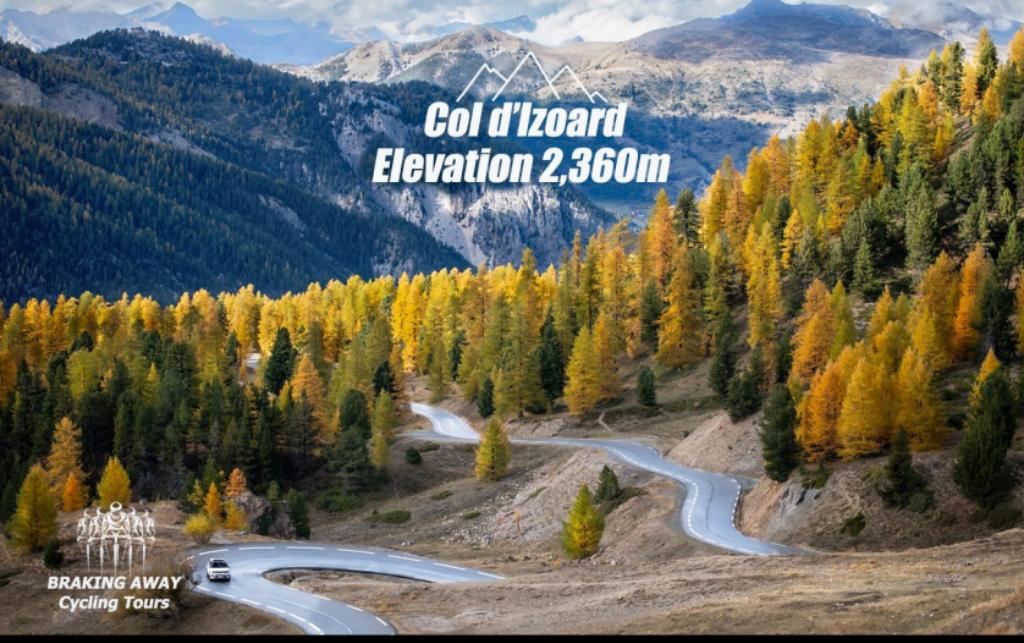

Alpe d'Huez
Elevation 1,860m

Day Four - Morning Alpe d'Huez

Alpe d'Huez - It doesn't get more mythical than Alpe d'Huez. Probably the most famous climb in racing history and one that is on every cyclist's bucket list.

The scene of countless battles, each of its 21 hairpins has its own story. 13.9km with an average gradient of 8.2% and a maximum of 12%, this climb will certainly test you. But reaching the summit of this iconic climb is a memory you will have forever.

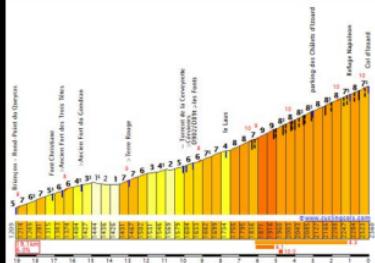

Col d'Izoard
Elevation 2,360m

Day Four - Afternoon Col d'Izoard

Col d'Izoard - Featured in Le tour 36 times, this mountain will make you feel like you are cycling on another planet.

The landscape is barren with protruding pinnacles of weathered rock. Several of the Tour de France's more memorable moments have occurred on the Col d'Izoard, particularly the exploits of Gino Bartali, Fausto Coppi, Louison Bobet and Bernard Thévenet. A small cycling museum is at the summit, along with a memorial to Coppi and Bobet. It's a must for any cycling fan.

Day Five

Col de la Bonette

Day 5 of our Icons Tour may require oxygen masks!! It's the day we take on the Col de la Bonette. The road to the summit of the Bonette climbs to almost 3,000m! The road around the Cime de la Bonette reaches an altitude of 2,802m (9,193 ft), but this is not a "pass", but merely a scenic loop. It is, however, the highest asphalted road in France and is the highest through road in Europe. The climb starts relatively modestly through lush meadows and then becomes progressively more desolate as the altitude rises. As we near the top, the terrain is more like a lunar landscape.

Mont Ventoux
Elevation 1,909m

Day Six Mont Ventoux

Day 6 of our 10 Icons tour belongs to The Giant of Provence. An icon amongst icons. The Ventoux. It stands alone, dominating everything for miles around. From afar it looks snow capped but that's just an illusion created by the bare limestone which covers the surface above the tree line. From Bedoin, the climb measures 21.3km with 1603m of ascent to give an average of 7.5%. The first 6km however are only 3.9% which means the remaining 16km average out at 8.9% with no let up at all. The Ventoux is one of the most gruelling climbs in Le Tour's history and just to climb it once, is a justifiable achievement and a fitting end to our tour.
